In the House.

A compromise was reached between the advocates and opponents of the Bedford ballot reform bill before the house convened tonight, under which it was agreed to bring out of the elections committee all ballot reform bills not later than next Tuesday. The purpose of this compromise was to prevent further discussion of the resolution offered on Friday by Mr. Bed-ford, of Philadelphia, to take his bill away from the committee and place it on the calendar. The resolution was under discussion when the house adjourned Friday and both sides were prepared for a spirited debate when the resolution should come up tonight under the order of unfinished business.

A meeting of the election committee was held this afternoon, at which it was decided by a vote of 8 to 10, Chairman Orr voting in the negative, to report the bill adversely. Before the house convened an agreement was reached between Messrs. Orr, Bedford and Cooper, of Delaware, to hold up the committee report and amend the Bedford resolution as indicated.

When the house convened, Mr. Cooper offered the amendment to the resolution, which was accepted by Mr. Bedford and adopted by the house. The other ballot reform bills be-fore the committee are the Pittsburg chamber of commerce's measure, introduced by Mr. Van Dyke, of Westmoreland, and the bill introduced by Mr. Arnold, of Perry, requiring candidates to file a sworn statement of their expenses of election. A resolution was reported from the rules committee, which was adopted. that afternoon sessions be held here-Thursdays, and that night sessions on Thursdays be discontinued. Dora looked up from her drawing and pinned me to the back of my chair with her coal-black eyes.

"Well, really, Dora," I replied, "as am not prepared to bring hydraulic pressure to bear on him, I don't see how to avoid the catastrophe. And how do you know which one of us he comes here to see? Besides, I'd rather spend my energy on a man who does not shy at every girl he meets." I burned under the look she darted

"You needn't comb your hair ove your face, old lady," she laughed; "I know the signs of the times. You've got it bad, or you wouldn't hang out a red fing in each cheek the minute I call his name. Goodness don't I wish he could see you in that dressing sacque with your hair down. You look like-listen!"

"Yes, sir: just come right in." we heard the housemaid say. Our hired girl was only four hours old-counting by her term of service in our flat-and we had forgotten to warn her against being veracious at the front door. Now she was, ushering in, unannounced, Colonel Arthur-of all

With dressing sacque and hair waving in the breeze, I made one wild dash for liberty, only to find the side door locked on the other side. I think that in that moment I must have realized how much I wished to look well in John Arthur's eyes.

"Tell him I'm out, and he'll go." whispered wildly; and slipped behind the window curtains just as he entered the door. I am not quite sure that I believed my own ears as that little flend Dora grasped his hand and said; "She isn't bere at present, but I am looking for her at any minute. Can't you come in and wait? No. don't sit there; come over here by the window-it's so much cooler."

And over she brought him, and seated him with his back so close to me that I had to flatten myself against the window facing to keep me from touching me.

That's the trouble about Dora; you never know one moment what she is going to do the next.

That I live to chronicle it. I can't to this day understand; but that girl kept that man talking till they had exhausted every subject in life, death and immortality. Several times I ventured to peep out from my hiding place and look death and destruction at Dora, but she gazed past me and out after on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and into the night with an innocence that was superb "Where is Miss Johnston?" Colonel

Arthur asked, at length. "Oh, I really don't know," replied my tormentor. "There was a young man-a very dear friend of her's from St. Louis-who was here all the afternoon, and they started for a stroll in the park just before you came." I would have given a pretty sum to see his expression that moment-the back of a masculine head conveys so little. Suddenly he got up from his chair and took another close at her side. I could see his face now, and it was very grave. "Miss Dora," he said, and the exreme timidity which she and I had so often deplored in him suddenly swept over him, "I-I am giad of this opportunity of talking with you by yourself. I've wanted to a long time, you know-but-but-' Oh, heavens, was there no way of

"I wanted to tell you-oh, I'm such a duffer-" You might have left me to find that out." Then, seriously: "But what is it. Colonel Arthur?" 'Well, I'm in love-please don't laugh-I'm madly, foolishly in love with Miss Johnston, but I am afraid to tell her. She's so distant, don't you

"She's not as 'distant' as you think, replied Dora, and I would have burst out laughing, if I hadn't been shaking and tingling.

"Yes, she is: she's as cold as an ice maiden, and-" he stopped, and Dora nodded sympathetically, "Florence is cold-" thoughtfully.

I should say I was! This evening preeze had been steadily rising, and was now blowing in a cold stream down the neck of my sacque. "Now I feel that I understand you.

he went on, "but she-well, she just seems to hide from me." I had to stuff my handkerchief in my mouth at this point, and I saw plainly that even Dora's illimitable composure shaken. "Wouldn't it be a good idea to ge and find her?" she suggested. "If I did I'd shut up like a clam the ninute I met her. I'd give half I own to have it said and over with." "How much do you happen to b worth?" she demanded.

"I? Oh, something like a hundred thousand," he answered-not catchin her meaning. "I have plenty to support her. But it's no use; I'll never be able to say it."

"Excuse me a moment, colonel, but the air from that window is quite cool. Won't you please lower the sash?" When he laid his hand on the cur tain, behind which I was nearly fainting, Dora escaped to the hall door like a flash, and as he pulled the tapestry from before my crimson face she dart ed out, crying: "Colonel Arthur, shall expect a check for $50,000 in the morning!"-New Orleans Times Demo-

Susquehana, March 2.-An Oakland farmer a few days ago went into the woods to get some fuel, and he got a better load than he expected. He saw giant hemlock stub on the edge of an tey marsh, cut it down and began to chop it into lengths. Soon he felt his axe strike something soft, and it broke through the shell of the stub. Thinking there might be a bear inside, ie proceeded cautiously, using wooden wedges to split the stub apart. When the hollow, dry log fell apart, there in the cavity lay eight fat coons, snugly housed for the winter. Further up in the trunk were two more coons, while in the stump was a fifty-pounder—the biggest and fattest of the lot. The lucky farmer thus got, besides his log wood, over two hundred pounds of coon meat and eleven coon skins, and ever since that day he has quit other work and goes about in the woods looking for more hollow logs with coons in

Hon. David Meekison is well known, not only in his own state, but throughout America. He began his political career by serving four consecutive terms as mayor of the town in which he lives, during which time he became widely known as the founder of the Meekison Bank, of Napoleon, Ohio. He was elected to the Fifty-fifth congress by a very large majority, and is the acknowledged leader of his party in his section of the state.

Only one flaw marred the otherwise complete success of this rising statesman. Catarrh with its insidious approach and tenacious grasp, was his only unconquered foe. For thirty years he waged unsuccessful warfare against this personal enemy. At last Peruna came to the rescue and he dictated the following letter to Dr. Hartman as the result:

"I have used several bottles of Peruna and feel greatly benefited thereby from my catarrh of the head. I feel encouraged to believe that if I use it a short time longer I will be able to fully eradicate the disease of thirty years' standing."—David Meekison, Member of

While many people have been cured of chronic catarrh by a single bottle tarrh becomes thoroughly fixed more than one bottle is necessary to complete a cure. Peruna has cured cases innumerable of catarrh of twenty years' standing. It is the best, if not tarrh in existence. But prevention is far better than cure. Every person subject to catch-ing cold should take Peruns at once at the slightest symptom of cold or sore throat at this season of the year and thus prevent what is almost certain to end in chronic catarrh.
